

roofscapes

Living roofs, often referred to as green roofs, are becoming an increasingly specified element of many commercial and residential projects as both planners and developers seek to ensure projects meet UK government quality and build targets, and deliver projects with sustainability at their core.

Living roofs not only enhance the environmental credentials of their developers, but deliver an array of tangible benefits too. A well-designed and carefully implemented living roof not only makes a property unique but can reduce water runoff, cool the building through the summer months and provide amenity space where land is at a premium. Further, the specification of a living roof can be part of a package tailored to support the delivery of national sustainability and zero carbon targets (including the Code for Sustainable Homes - Code level 4), as well as those set by local planners.

Creating thriving living spaces, in often inaccessible areas of a development, takes a broad range of specialist skills. Over recent years tcl has developed a team of specialists equipped with the skills to transform featureless rooftops into places of use and natural beauty. With an understanding of the logistical, financial and time constraints developers are faced with, tcl works as part of a team to ensure the developer's goals are realised. With both the horticultural knowledge and a detailed understanding of construction processes, tcl's 'roofscapes' guarantees your living roof project will be a great success.

The fully integrated 'roofscapes' service will design, install and maintain living roof solutions suitable for a range of roof structures and end users. Our services can be delivered independently or as a package, maintaining financial certainty at every stage of the project. Projects undertaken can include Extensive, Semi-intensive, Bio-diverse and Intensive green roofs.
